for this Important Training: Discovery As A Process

The HCBS Settings Rule dramatically redefines how services and supports are provided to those with IDD. Providers who offer day-to-day support are still struggling to practically apply the new expectations of the Settings Rule.

Discovery As A Process training* will help provider staff approach these complex situations using a framework rooted in person-centered approaches.

Attendees will leave this training with the following:

- More information about the HCBS Settings Rule and its new standard of service delivery
- A greater appreciation of the Discovery Process and how to apply it to any situation
- Experience debriefing on complex scenarios that are commonly encountered by provider staff
- A practical, repeatable series of steps that staff can use to help promote autonomy while not neglecting identified risks
- Supported through thinking critically about situations when health and safety and hopes and dreams are in conflict

*This training is part one of a two-part training.

Balancing greater autonomy with health and welfare can be tricky.

- How do you support someone who lives in a residential setting and wants to have their partner over to visit behind a locked bedroom door?
- Can you restrict food for a person you support who is on a restricted diet?
- How can we meaningfully involve the person in the way support is provided while also honoring the Settings Rule requirements?
